

Building the Future in Central America Requires Smart Investments in Safe and Sustainable Communities

Last Friday, November 14, Vice President Joe Biden, the presidents of Guatemala, El Salvador, and Honduras, and IDB President Luis Alberto Moreno, met to develop a joint plan to respond to the underlying conditions that are driving migration from Central America. The discussion focused on development and job opportunities, governability, and the challenges of citizen security.

Addressing the violence, poverty, and desperation that the region is experiencing is a shared responsibility. It is not merely a question of resources but one of smart investments—with a human rights-based approach—that prioritizes:

- 1. Equitable Economic Development: The call for economic development must focus first and foremost on job creation, training, and education in order to create new opportunities for youth, in both urban and rural settings.
- 2. Violence Prevention: Substantial support should be given to evidence-based violence prevention at the community level, the reintegration of youth seeking to leave the influence of gangs, and the protection of children who have suffered violence.
- 3. Strengthening Civilian Institutions: Tackling the problems of organized crime, street gangs and insecurity require solid criminal investigations, professional and accountable police forces, and an effective criminal justice system. These are roles for civilian institutions, not the military.

As civil society organizations in the United States and the Central American region, we look forward to working jointly on building safe, sustainable, and prosperous communities in Central America. Fundación Myrna Mack
Instituto de Enseñanza para el Desarrollo
Sostenible (IEPADES)
Instituto Demos
Plataforma Internacional contra la Impunidad
Instituto Universitario de Opinión Pública
(IUDOP-UCA)
Fundación Nacional para el Desarrollo (FUND

Fundación Nacional para el Desarrollo (FUNDE) Centro de Educación y Capacitación de PASSOS Heinrich Böll Stiftung, El Salvador Centro de Documentación de Honduras (CEDOH)
Asociación por una Sociedad Justa (ASJ)
Interpeace
La Coalición Centroamericana para la Prevención
de la Violencia Juvenil (CCPVJ)
Washington Office on Latin America (WOLA)
Due Process of Law Foundation (DPLF)
Church World Service (CWS)
Kids in Need of Defense (KIND)

Casa Alianza, Honduras